[AND THAT'S JUST THIS MONTH...]

Serenbe, a 1000-acre community just south of Atlanta, is receiving national attention as one of the country's best places to live, dine and visit. The summer issue of Cottage Living, a national magazine, features Serenbe on the cover, and it tops the publication's highly regarded "Top 10 Communities in the Nation" list. Similarly, The Atlantan, a stylish city magazine, features Serenbe as one of Atlanta's most desirable neighborhoods (along with Inman Park, Buckhead, Castleberry, and West Midtown).

Says the magazine: "It's Pleasantville with an environmental edge. Marvelously mismatched home designs from log cabin and contemporary to modern and Greek Revival pull together in a posh patchwork, representative of the creative community who lives there, including families, artists, retirees and second home snowbirds from all corners of the country who cash in on Serenbe's proximity to Hartsfield-Jackson airport." And the Atlanta Journal Constitution, Georgia's most widely read newspaper, in early July reported on Serenbe's success as a bright spot in an otherwise dismal housing market.

The press is not all real estate related--Serenbe's restaurants also continue to receive critical acclaim. The Hil is one of the 15 "Best New Restaurants for 2008" in Atlanta Magazine, and received a glowing review from top food critic Christiane Lauterbach in the current Knife & Fork. Says Lauterbach, "Hilary White works closely with the Serenbe Organic Farms, whose bounteous produce she features on a menu that is as fresh, sincere, and impeccable as she is as a chef." Plus, as the AJC's food critic recently reported, The Farmhouse (which was a "Best New Restaurant" last year) continues to thrive. And the Inn at Serenbe serves as the stylish setting of Atlanta Peach magazine's ultra-chic summer fashion editorial.

Come see for yourself what all the buzz is about.

We'd love for you to experience our community, for a day, a weekend, a season, or a lifetime.
