

Home Green Home

More real estate agents are marketing themselves as eco-friendly -- connecting eco-minded buyers to "green" homes and helping sellers make their home more environmentally sensitive. Here's a look at some green listings and projects. (See related article.)

Print this.

Mary Warren/Serenbe.com

A home in the Serenbe development, located about 40 minutes south of Atlanta: All of the dwellings in Serenbe -- which range in price from $325,000 to more than $1 million -- are EarthCraft certified, an eco-friendly building certification administered through the local homebuilders association.

On his blog, which features a Serenbe listing, EcoBroker Carson Matthews says of the community, "they are truly making it happen."